

ARDUDWY CROWN RENTAL 1623

CROWN RENTALS

A Crown rental was a list of rents paid to the Crown that derived from early proprietors. The rents were relatively small amounts which did not reflect the current economic value of the land, for the lineages' link with the land was long lasting, often surviving major conflicts and disturbances such as plague and the Glyndŵr rebellion. Such families were referred to as 'chief tenants' and, in present-day terms, would be owners paying freehold rents. The term 'chief rents' is thus used to distinguish Crown rents from the rents paid by under-tenants to chief tenants. The distinction became clear with the growth the 'new landowners' with expanding estates that required under-tenants to farm the lands. In this sense, they mark the watershed between the slowly eroded ancient systems of family ownership and the new entrepreneurs of the Tudor and Stuart periods.

A few fragments of such sixteenth and seventeenth-century Crown rentals are known and they provide valuable information about land tenure, families who held land, the development of local estates and changes in the social structure. In the case of the Ardudwy Crown rental of 1623 it is possible to trace family lands and the associations that were made by judicious marriages. The power and wealth of many historical, well-known individuals is revealed in their possession of land.

Crown rentals are sometimes referred to as surveys. They are found in estate collections, more frequently in the eighteenth century. Copies in the Llanfair Brynodol collection are particularly useful texts and suggest that rentals were prepared annually for audits by the Crown. In Ardudwy, many of these rents are identical to those listed in the Ardudwy Crown rental of 1623.

*= the name survives as a farm name in the 1840 Tithe Apportionment.

= the name survives as a field name in the 1840 Tithe Apportionment.

Names in italics denote uncertainties or lack of other written evidence of the name. Personal names have been standardised when there are several spellings. Place-names and personal names are given capitals.

Entries struck through are thus in manuscript.
